MY VISION OF CANADA

I have already referred to the admiration and love which, as a result of my residence in Canada, I have come to feel for Canada, her people, institutions and modes of life.

God has been lavish in His bounties to Canada of field and forest. He has staked out her boundaries with a full hand and put into the oceans which lap her shores and into the waters which fructify her fields inexhaustible sources of food. He has given her ample watercourses to carry with ease her commerce and natural bounties from shore to shore. In her bowels He has placed the greatest mineral wealth and sources of power supply.

The Almighty is an all-wise Providence. He does all things with a purpose, and as I try to discern His purpose in so richly endowing Canada it seems to me that God must have in store for Canada a great destiny—a destiny that will be commensurate with her geography. It is to me positively sacrilegious to believe that the Great Geometrician of the Universe meant Canada to have a population of eight million, barely sufficient to fill up one of its Provinces. God intended Canada to be the home of millions and millions of His children. He intended that to her shores they should come from all corners of the globe and here they should work out a great experiment in democracy. That here people of all races, nations and religions should come, seeking security and opportunity to live their lives freely and creatively, to pool their racial, religious and national interests in an attempt to create in Canada a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the ideals of that great commonwealth of peoples of which Canada, I hope, will ever remain an integral part. The world of Europe, with its walls of misunderstanding and prejudices that people seem to be constantly renewing instead of demolishing, has failed to create those ideals and modes of life on which an enduring peace can be built. God in His infinite wisdom is ever building and destroying—daily renewing the work of Creation. He is seeking to lead man to fashion a world where men and women, though different in origin and diverse in outlook, can still live and labour together in peace. Canada is God's new field of experimentation. To Canada He has brought the best seed winnowed from the gardens of Europe. Here, like a loving gardener, He has planted those seeds, and in soil that is rich and fertile. Here God wishes to establish the Garden of Humanity. Will we who are His instruments help Him? This we can only do if we try to discern His purposes and lay them to heart and resolve to be His instrument to carry them out. In many respects the pioneers of Canada have shown that they were willing to be God's instruments. I regard the British North America Act as a God-given covenant, written by men divinely inspired. In this covenant are laid down the principles of racial, religious, cultural and political equality.

In no country in the Western Hemisphere do we have the condition where by constitutional enactment two great peoples like the French and the Anglo-Saxons, different in race, religion, culture, language and even law, have contracted to live together in a bonne entente, committed to contributing their very all to the upbuilding of Canada. And what is true of the French and the Anglo-Saxons will apply to all the other races who come here carrying in their souls the rich cultural heritage that is theirs to offer up on the altar of the New Canada. This experiment in harmonizing ethnic groups of diverse characteristics so that they may develop all that is best in their nature for the sake of contributing to the general culture and civilization is new on this continent. Here it is working itself out on soil that has not been drenched by blood spilled in wars of racial, national and religious prejudice. Canada's soil is virgin, pure, hallowed. It has never witnessed the bloodshed of internecine strife. May it ever remain so. The working out of this experiment in Democracy is, of course, beset by many difficulties. There is the difficulty to overcome a far-flung territory and a sparsely settled population, the misunderstandings that grow out of the separation and isolation of peoples.

The problem of bilingualism, and perhaps other languages which for a generation or two the different immigrant groups will continue to cultivate, the problem of harmonizing culture and religion and modes and habits of living that are different to these now already established—in a word, the assimilation of peoples—are the difficulties to be faced. But what are these difficulties when there is hope and faith that we are carrying out a Divine Destiny? I admire the consecration with which Canadians face this problem of nation building.

I have come to admire the fine spirit of fealty to British institutions which characterizes Canadians and in saying British I do not mean necessarily Anglo-Saxon, but rather that synthesis of culture and civilization that the world now calls British. I admire Canada's determination to be a diadem in the crown of the Empire's glory, a bright facet in the jewel of the British commonwealth of nations. Canada's glorious war record, with fifty thousand of her best sons who, in a foreign land, sleep the sleep that knows no waking, attests to this, that the Motherland never calls to her children in vain.

The political basis of government in Canada, with its responsiveness to the will of the people, and the absence of a higher will than that of the people that can thwart the will of the people, as is the case in other Democracies—patterned as it is on the British form of government, is further proof of Canada's attachment to British life and institutions. Canada's literature and predominant language, her forms of social life, all are English in spirit and origin.

Canada, as the home of an experimentation in democracy, which is the science and art of perfecting human relationships, is endeavouring to lead in a new sphere of influence that of the common ownership by the people of great public utilities. Canada has long been the object of attention of the whole civilized world because of the large number of public utilities already under public ownership. Our National railway, our Hydro-Electric system in Ontario, the miracle of modern power production, our municipal street car system in many cities, to mention but a few, are indications of the faith Canadians have that public utilities should be publicly owned. Canada will influence world trend in this direction. I love the adventurous spirit which leads Canadians in this field of economic democracy.

The Christian world is to-day in a state of religious unrest. The Church is passing through the throes of one era dying whilst the new era seems powerless to be born. In the midst of this turmoil of religious reformation and theological evolution, Canada is working out what I regard as one of the most

Every Friday

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour
That for what it cost me to be free
I might have had an anchor."

Jews must rejoice over the big victory against bigotry achieved last week when the United States Supreme Court declared the Oregon School Law unconstitutional. This law, a result of Ku Klux Klan domination of the state's election machinery, while presumably meant to abolish Catholic parochial schools, would have created state monopoly of the education of school-age children by compelling all parents to send their children to the public schools. The Supreme court, in its unanimous decision, holds that the child is not merely the creature of the state and that it is the right and duty of the parents and guardians to direct the education of the children as they please, so long as the form of education is adequate. This decision of the court is its second recent one against infringement of personal freedom, the first having been against the Nebraska bill to bar the teaching of German from the public schools.

Another noteworthy incident occurred lately when Governor Donahey, of Ohio, vetoed the bill to make Bible reading compulsory in the schools, reminding the legislators that "Ohio is not yet ready to secede from its principles of civil and religious liberty." The fight is now on to see whether the country as a whole shares his feeling, and although these decisions mark only the beginning, they are impressive victories and should strengthen liberals of all groups against the next attempt at sectarian dictatorship.

It was recently reported that the Liberal Synagogue in London excludes money-lenders from membership, the rabbi of the congregation having declared that money-lending is disloyalty to Judaism. Of course, synagogues, being for the most part institutions of the vested interests, may feel entitled to build up their memberships according to whatever peculiar tastes and exclusive standards they choose, but it seems only fair to the money-lenders that a line be drawn between those who lend money at exorbitant interest and others whose dealings are fair. Is the Liberal Synagogue willing to part with its bankers, for example, or hasn't it any? The man who sells goods on account is in effect lending money. Should the man who has been kind enough to help his friend with a loan confess to the rabbi and be removed from the roll?

The business of weeding out presents a wide field of activity to the perfect membership committee, one to be recommended only, however, to the synagogue with an enormous list to work on, so that there may be a few left for the pews when the job is done. How about eliminating those active members so careless with the sacred traditions of Judaism that they reserve Friday evenings for social engagements instead of going to church? Then there are the employers who fail to provide decent working conditions for their help, and other employers, or the same ones, who underpay their help; women who observe the Sabbath punctiliously and work their maids all day Saturday because company is coming on Sunday; professional and business men known to indulge in sharp practices; in Canada and the States, those who buy from bootleggers, thereby providing a market for liquor, to say nothing of the bootleggers themselves; people who live high and moan over the money that has to be extracted from them for charity, and others equally disloyal to Judaism.

So why stop with money-lenders, even the grasping ones? If the Liberal Synagogue wants an Ivory soap pure membership it should also do away with the borrower, partner in sin with the lender, and it should not be surprised at last if it is left with a few maiden ladies who have nothing to do but clip coupons.

Arthur Schnitzler, the Shaw of Vienna

By LOUIS RITTENBURG

Virtually all of Europe is a vast hospital; some parts of her are veritable morgues. Cities, formerly the centers of pulsating life and gaiety, are in the throes of abysmal despair, nursing wounds inflicted by a war that made all the world sad. Optimists meet derision; ideals, theories cry for revision. The God of Gloom sits enthroned. And all this is so simply because millions of artless humans permitted themselves to be swayed by the sanguinary exhortations of power-mad leaders, rather than by the humane eloquence of such courageous peace advocates as George Bernard Shaw, Jean Juarés, Anatole France, Maximilian Harden and Arthur Schnitzler.

And of the countries worst hit by this virulent darkness is Austria. Vienna, whose contributions to the social and cultural development of the world, before the war, had been notable, Vienna of "wine, woman and song" fame, seems utterly crushed. The licentiousness implied in the phrase quoted above was another accelerant in the disintegration of the Austrian capital. To the exposition of this moral laxity Arthur Schnitzler has ever dedicated his prolific pen.

Whether in drama, essay, short story or novel, Schnitzler draws the curtain aside on scenes peopled by husband, wife, prostitute, soldier, chambermaid, poet, actress, on mischief bent. He invariably makes them reveal their psychic reactions in all their crudeness and triviality. Schnitzler the erstwhile physician, surgeon and pathologist—keen and philosophical by nature—saw clearly the evils undermining present-day society. And he raised a warning finger against the inevitable consequences.

This became apparent in the early 'nineties, when Vienna seemed to be turning away from naturalism to an artificial, snobbish eroticism. Schnitzler, fresh from the operating room and mightily stirred by an urge to write, sounded a new note in a series of dramatic dialogues known to English-speaking readers as "The Affairs of Anatole."

In these and in subsequent plays he epitomizes the highly cultivated and superficial life in the last and staunchest stronghold of autocracy which he holds primarily responsible for the downfall of the Austrian Empire. It would be difficult to conceive any variation in this large problem left unelaborated by Schnitzler.

Always in the plays of Schnitzler we wind our way among delicate, amusing and intriguing, yet grimly serious situations.

If Schnitzler is to-day one of the keenest analysts of the sophisticated modern soul, in man or woman, we need but bear in mind that in back of his genius as writer there has always lurked the disenchanting wisdom of the practicing physician and psychologist.

No contemporary writer dovetails his tragic and comic touches into one another more skillfully than Schnitzler. The line of demarcation is often too difficult to find. Throughout all his work there sparkles a scintillant wit, suffused with lambent humour. Nor is the erotic element infrequent, because of the moral problems that he seeks to present, without cant, as deterrents to those rushing headlong over perilous paths. His aim is to make people, the sons of toil as well as those of the leisure class, take heed of the ominous mutterings of the times.

In this he is at one with his illustrious British colleague, George Bernard Shaw, who is indefatigable and merciless in flaying depravity and whose who, by their very wickedness, tend to retard civilization in the truest sense of that much-abused term.

Schnitzler, [illegible] of science that he is, morality. He does not presume to set up new, rigidly binding principles of conduct. One of the first man-made phenomena to rouse him to a resentment productive of some of his best works was the double standard of ethics for men and women. His style may have been crude in those days, but that was amply offset by the earnestness and incisiveness with which he would assail the problem.

A remarkable creative faculty soon developed Schnitzler's style to a degree that made his severest critics bow in (reluctant) homage. Stripping the glamour off erotic relations and false friendships became the pastime of this doctor, poet and pathologist; dissecting the soul and applying remedies to the social body, his specialty.

One who reads Schnitzler cannot help feeling how easy the path has been made through intricate ravines; one gains a glimpse of many other paths, leading toward stranger realms. One has the feeling of having rambled through deep woods along the borderland between the conscious and unconscious.

His novels are admirably characterized in his own "Lady Beate," thus: "The two sat opposite each other and each held a mirror to the other, in which the other saw himself . . ." Most of his heroes move about in a world devoid of convention.

Nevertheless it is his "Liebelei" that has won the greatest measure of approval for it treats the love theme and its workings within the heart of youth with a depth of feeling not surpassed since Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

To Jewish admirers of Schnitzler, his "Professor Bernhardi" holds particular interest. It treats of that incurable disease of German mentality, anti Semitism, and its special Viennese variety. The pettiness of racial hatred and its advocates supplies an admirable background for the author's scourging sarcasm, which at times is as modant as Heine's. Little wonder that German super-patriots froth at the mouth when told—as so many authorities have done—that not since Heine have they produced such wit, coupled with which is a sense of form and artistry quite beyond compare.

Even more significant from the standpoint of the Jewish question is an earlier (1908) novel of Schnitzler's called "Der Weg ins Freie." This is the book that to English readers is ostensibly the latest work of this author, for it was published here (Knopf) during the current year under the title of "The Road to the Open."

Throughout this volume one comes across dialogues that are brilliant debates on Judaism, the sources of anti-Semitism and the fallacies of Zionism. The story proper revolves around a young nobleman who falls in love with Anna, a highly cultured Jewess, whose family is on the downward path. Coming thus in contact with various types of Jews (characterized with uncompromising irony), the young baron is perturbed by Anna's loyalty to members of her people, though, he is convinced, she does not share their characteristics.

A Zionist father has a son who becomes a rabid anti-Semite—two extremes that are possible only in an atmosphere as artificial as Vienna to-day, even more so than at the time the book was written, breathes.

The temptation to re-create, by quotation, some of the situations is irresistible. Thus we have Willy Eisler, a Jewish youth, son of a connoisseur and collector of objets d'art, priding himself on having, by deliberate cultivation and an iron will "converted himself into the deceptive counterpart of a feudal gentleman bred and born." He is also fond of relating Jewish anecdotes of his soldiering days.

Dr. von Breitner, a baptized Jew, with a philosophical mind, waxes indignant at the idea that music composed by Jews be permitted to invade the Budapest Orpheum (a theatre where risqué plays are performed.

Then there is the Baron von Wergenthin-Recco (Anna's lover), who, exasperated by painful truisms hurled at him by his brilliant and cynical Jewish friend of political aspirations, blurts out: "Yes, yes, but I think you will agree that being ragged for being a baron is a very different matter than being ragged for being a 'Jew,' although the latter . . . may at times denote the better aristocracy."

Old Ehrenberg, a wealthy Jew, more or less weary of the exactions of social climbing, decides to go to Palestine "perhaps only because one reads so much about Zionism and so forth."

His friend Nurnberger pats himself on the back by saying: "I am not baptized, but on the other hand I am certainly not a Jew either. I've ceased to belong to the congregation for a long time, for the simple reason that I never felt myself to be a Jew." How like many of our own social upstarts! And how quickly their ardour would dampen if, as Ehrenberg retorts, "some one were to bash in your top hat because you have a somewhat Jewish nose, you'd realize pretty quick that you were insulated because you were a Yiddisher fellow."

Heinrich, in a dispassionate discussion with Leo, "exclaimed that he regarded Zionism as the worst affliction that had ever burst upon the Jews . . . He did not mind recognizing Zionism as a moral principle and a social movement, if it could honestly be regarded in that light, but the idea of the foundation of a Jewish state on a religious and national basis struck him as a nonsensical defiance of the whole spirit of historical evolution."

Heinrich, from all indications, is none other than Schnitzler whose keen intellect foresaw how chimerical the idea of a Jewish homeland must seem to those not easily swayed by pure rhetoric. He scorns the suggestion that members of a race whose flower had always merged in the culture of the land of their adoption be gathered from all the corners of the globe in order to be sent to a foreign land, a land to which no homesickness calls them.

To give absolute proof of his courage of convictions, and to hurl defiance at the Jew-baiters, Schaitzler (alias Heinrich) tells Leo: "I'll admit, into the bargain, that in spite of my complete indifference to every single form of religion I would positively never allow myself to be baptized, even if it were possible—though that is less the case to-day than ever it was—to escape once and for all anti-Semitic bigotry and villainy by a dodge like that."

What a source of inspiration and strength to the champions of tolerance the world over!

Biographically speaking, it is noteworthy that Schnitzler's father was a famous throat specialist and professor at the University of Vienna. (His grandfather's name was Zimmerman.) Young Schnitzler studied medicine and surgery. Upon receiving his degree, he entered a hospital. Later he practiced independently and became a noted pathologist. In collaboration with his father, he edited the Wienerglinsche Rundschau and was co-author of a medical textbook still in vogue. He made a tour of England and contributed papers to various publications, both professional and lay.

He is said to be rather reserved and resentful of adulation. A brooding tranquility emanates from his pale, bearded countenance. An affectionate and infectious smile lurks constantly in his eyes.

His best known works are: "The Affairs of Anatole," "The Green Cockatoo," "Lebendige Stunden," "The Marionettes," "Countess Mizzi," "The Call of Life," "The Young Midardus," "Frau Bertha Garlan," "The Road to the Open," "Twilight Souls," "Liebelei," "Lieutenant Gustl," "Prof. Bernhardi" and "Casanova's Home-coming."

One cannot but regret that limitations of space preclude an exhaustive treatment of each of Schnitzler's works. Yet to know Schnitzler it is essential that one be familiar with every scintillant facet of his variegated art, which is like a waltz-chain with a tear-drop of melancholy among its links. How impartially and with what precision can one holding the critical scales appraise this divine art?

On the occasion of his sixtieth birthday, which was celebrated on May 15 1922, by littérateurs of every civilized country, Schnitzler's works were eulogized as immortal classics. One contemporary felicitated him with the following tribute: "Like no one else, you held with a tender hand the last temptations of a glimmering Vienna. You were the attending physician at her death-bed. You loved her more deeply because you sensed her doom. You were the last poet of her agony."

And one may justly say that Schnitzler's tender hand is also on the pulse of the rest of the world. Hence the human warmth that permeates his every line. He suffers the enchantment of fleeting youth, the love of friendship, the beauty of imperishable art; he endures all this with that sweetness of melancholy which we have learned to associate with his works. He endures the injustice which, during every hour of life, man commits against his fellow-man. He has the courage and strength to descend into the mystic chambers of the subconscious, in order to unearth those significant psychic cross-currents, the discovery of which is linked with the name of his bosom friend, Sigmund Freud.

Known as a prodigious toiler, Schnitzler's fecundity is equalled only by his versatility. Perhaps his chief significance lies in his ability to sense and render articulate spiritual subtleties (which no one before him succeeded in molding into words and moods) rather than in the perfume of mundane eroticism, or in the portrayal of a dying society and its upholders. He never ceases to be the diagnostician, a keen-visioned, understanding physician—a creative one at that—who does not cling to textbooks but pursues the dictates of his own physical and psychic experiences. This may account for the fact that nearly all of his "casts" include a physician.

Unlike many of his contemporaries, Schnitzler is by no means the flippant rascal of literature, but a man who takes his art and himself seriously.

Heinrich Mann calls him "the spirit of the times," to which we may add that the broad acres of the soul (spirit) constitute his world.

May he, through many years to come, continue to return frequently, treasure-laden, if only with such deliciously salacious morsels as "Casanova's Homecoming" (Seltzer), which is among his very latest works and which, together with "Reigen," recently stirred up a hornet's nest among our moral guardians.

DR. MAGNES PAYS TRIBUTE TO JEWISH PHYSICIANS IN PALESTINE

New York.—Dr. Judah L. Magnes, Dean of the Hebrew University, was guest of honour Saturday night at a dinner of the American Jewish Physicians' Committee, at which over 200 of the leading Jewish physicians of New York paid tribute to him for his outstanding service in connection with the establishment of the University on Mount Scopus.

Through the contributions of the American Jewish Physicians' Committee, founded by Dr. Nathan Ratnoff, its president, the first departments of the University have been functioning, and Dr. Ma[illegible] praised the generosity and vision of the founder and members of the Committee for the results they have thus far accomplished and for their future plans, which include the building of a great medical college and hospital for the University.

Dr. Israel Strauss, eminent neurologist of Mt. Sinai Hospital, presided at the dinner, and the speakers included Dr. Magnes, Dr. Israel Wechsler, secretary of the Committee, who recently returned from Palestine; Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, Bernard Semel and Dr. Ratnoff, who described the plans of the Committee for the maintenance of its present work in connection with the University and its programme for the erection of a University medical center.

Emphasizing the scientific aspects of the Hebrew University and its significance in the modern life of the world, Dr. Magnes declared that the University would not be a theological school, but that the faculty of Jewish studies would regard everything in Judaism as a fair object of scientific study and that, above all, it would be devoted to pure scholarship, to a quest for the truth. "Nothing in Judaism but will be placed under our microscopes," he said. "It is impossible to have an understanding of Jewish genius without making of Judaism a human study. We regard our central Jewish faculty, flanked by the faculties of science and of the humanities, as representative of the genius of Judaism. Through our Jewish faculty we want to establish the complete Jewish personality, with the result that a Judaism with new life, vigour and meaning to the [illegible] world will emerge. The University modern Judaism to relate its mind to the mind of the world.

"The University will thus, through its great Jewish minds, contribute toward the development of knowledge, toward the synthesis of the Jewish soul. It will heal the Jewish soul and thus help to heal the soul of mankind."

Dr. Magnes disclosed for the first time that the late Jacques Loeb, of the Rockefeller Institute, one of the world's greatest scientists, had, fifteen years ago, offered his services in establishing a marine zoological laboratory in Palestine wherever scientific centres were established there. And Dr. Magnes of Dr. Loeb last year, another great Jewish scientist would have been added to the role of great Jewish geniuses like Einstein, who are helping to make the University one of the great world centres of higher learning.

The Austrian Chancellor, Dr. Ramek, has expressed his satisfaction with the fact that the next Zionist Congress will be held in Vienna, and has promised that the Government will do all in its power to facilitate the gathering. The Minister od Communications is making arrangements for special visas, as well as for post, telegraph, railway and hotel

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement in 160-acre blocks at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, mineral, water power, fish, game and scenery, are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

pronounced contributions to the world religious revival. I have reference to the Church Union movement, in which I am tremendously interested, though not personally concerned. In this respect I am not like a certain Scotch Presbyterian with whom I otherwise have much in common (for the Scotch are only puritanical Hebrews) who, when asked for his opinion of Church Union, replied: "Never mind Church Union; I'm in favour of Government Control." I am in favour of Church Union, though I also happened to be in favour of Government Control. Church Union was not only a necessity from a business point of view, because it cuts down duplication and overlapping of competing Churches in small places, but for a more profoundly important reason, Church Union is a frank declaration that the sectarian basis of the varieties of Protestant Churches, which split them up into warring factions and made of Protestantism a mockery, has in fact in our day and age fallen down. The Church Union movement is an indication that Protestantism now desires to stand united on the great ethical and religious foundations which Jesus builded—to be the religion of Jesus instead of the religion about Jesus.

I appreciate that it is but natural for a movement as significant as Church Union—touching on so many traditions and things about which people are most sensitive and sentimental—should arouse bitter controversy and bring into play strong personalities who contend with one another in aught but a Christian spirit. This is to be expected; it is but the smoke of the battle. The struggle has been a long and fearful one. The Churches brought into Union seemed at first incompatible, even as the Provinces in the time of Canadian Confederation seemed incompatible: But I venture the prophecy that Church Union will prove in time as compatible as has Confederation, and that when a generation has elapsed the builders of Church Union will be regarded with something like the veneration with which we now look upon the Fathers of Confederation. The Church Union movement is the most significant phenomenon in religious evolution of modern times. It is visioned and its implications for religion are far reaching.

In speaking of the things in Canada I have come to admire, brief reference must be made to the fine appreciation for education which exists here. In this respect Canadians are like the Jews. A fine interest is also manifesting itself in the Arts—literature, painting, music. Canada is beginning to develop a distinct literature of its own. The Canadian press is sober, international, representative and dignified. It is fortunately not tainted with yellow journalism.

But above all that I admire in Canada are the Canadian people whose character is reflected in the things I have referred to. The people of Canada are still characterized by the spirit of those pioneers who built and are still building Canada. It is a spirit of youth, rugged, undaunted, optimistic in the face of overwhelming difficulties. With such a people Canada ought to have a great future.

$1,000 YESHIVA DINNER GREAT SUCCESS

New York.—Orthodox Jewry has again demonstrated its strength and its intense desire to keep burning brightly the light of the Torah in America.

When announcement was first made that Orthodox Jews of America had decided to raise a fund of $5,000,000 with which to expand the overcrowded Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary into a great Yeshiva of America, able to accommodate over two thousand students and including in its curriculum for the first time in this country, a Jewish college, the announcement was greeted with no little scepticism. For Orthodox Jewry, although contributing liberally to all leading Jewish movements in this country, had never before attempted for such a giant project.

Yet a mere handful of the leaders of the movement, 125 men, at the first dinner, launching the campaign, raised $1,000,000, and thus fully answered the sceptics and the doubters.

To raise the second million dollars of the building fund, it was decided to hold a $1,000 dinner at which 1,000 men and women would pay a cover charge of $1,000 each. Again there were expressions of doubt. For no dinner on so lavish a scale had ever before been broached in this country and no organization had ever attempted a $1,000 cover charge to reach its goal. Dinners with a cover charge of $100 have been common in fund-raising campaigns, but no one had before even dared to announce a $1,000 dinner with a goal of 1,000 guests.

The dinner was held Sunday night and the great main ballroom of the Hotel Astor was filled to overcrowding by 1,200 men and women, each of whom had paid $1,000 for the privilege of aiding in the work of perpetuating Torah in America.

The speakers included: Samuel Levy, chairman of the campaign, who presided; Rabbi M. S. Margolies, honourary chairman and dean of American Orthodox rabbis; Prof. Charles T. Torrey, head of the Department of Semitics of Yale, and Prof. Nathan Isaacs of the Harvard Law School, who welcomed the Yeshiva of America on behalf of two of America's greatest educational institutions; Dr. Bernard Revel, president of the faculty of the Yeshiva, whose outstanding leadership has largely made the present expansion possible; Dr. David Yellin, vice-mayor of Jerusalem; Harold Rosenthal, representing the undergraduates of the Yeshiva, who is the American-born son of an American-born father; Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, vice-chairman of the campaign, and a leader in Jewish education in America; and Harris L. Selig, executive director of the campaign, who originated the idea of the $1,000 dinner.

Open to everybody in the Dominion

This contest is open to everybody in the Dominion of Canada—from schoolboys and girls old enough to write, to grandparents.
But no answers from other countries will be considered.
Everybody will be talking about this contest,
One reason is that this advertisement is published today in cities and towns all over Canada—from Nova Scotia to Vancouver Island.
There will be many contestants—and these will make it the more interesting. But there are many cash prizes—203 in all—and the question is a simple one and is easy to answer.

The reasons for this Contest are very interesting

We cannot improve Coca-Cola. Its taste and thirst-quenching qualities have long been perfected. Also with care and skill, we have perfected the methods of preparing it—safeguarding at every step its purity and goodness. But we might be able to improve the service by which it is made available to you—and that's why we ask the question, "When do you enjoy Coca-Cola most?"
This contest is Dominion-wide because the popularity of Coca-Cola extends from coast to coast. With this great popularity of Coca-Cola, The Coca-Cola Company of Canada, Ltd., is anxious to get as much information as possible on the most popular methods of distribution. When—at what places—at what times—under what circumstances—do you enjoy Coca-Cola most?
Hence—$2,500.00 in cash prizes is offered for the best answers.

The beverage that's enjoyed from Nova Scotia to Vancouver Island

You'll understand our interest in the answers when you grasp the dimensions of the Coca-Cola organization.
In order to adequately supply the demand, four Coca-Cola syrup factories have been built in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver.
Modern bottling plants have been established in these four cities and in fifteen others—Quebec, Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Peterboro, Hamilton, London, Windsor, Port Arthur, Brandon, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary and Lethbridge.
And there are 50 independent bottlers in other cities who bottle Coca-Cola under a license from this Company.
Coca-Cola is served everywhere—by more than 20,000 retailers—at soda fountains, refreshment stands, in clubs, hotels, restaurants, grocery stores and dozens of other places. Of course we're anxious to know what service is most appealing to our customers—the millions of Canada.

What is Coca-Cola?

It is a blend of pure products from nature—with nothing artificial in it—best described as "delicious and refreshing". Prepared in clean, modern plants, by the most scientific methods, it is absolutely pure and wholesome. And here's the biggest fact of all: Its wide distribution and huge volume make possible the giving of a beverage of the highest possible quality for only a few cents.

A wonderful opportunity to earn one of the 203 Cash Prizes—perhaps $1000

"When do you enjoy Coca-Cola most?" Simple, sincere answers are the kinds wanted. You can write your answer in three words or 300—the shorter the better. Mail your answer to:
